REPORTERS WIDEN THEIR SCOPE

Editors have sent their chief reporters out on a health-cure to Amsterdam. Mental pressure and deadlines provoked an unforeseen desire to escape the EASA community for one day. Free lance reporters couldn't make it in time, so EASA editing-team apologizes for this only one page issue...

DELI CORNER

Today's baguette was perfect. We love the French for improving their baguette everyday! How do they manage to continue this daily improvement? We can only praise the staff's efforts and skills. And every morning delivered avec l'amour!

Tonight EASA's spectacular traditional National Evening season will be opened by the Dutch & Swish teams.

The Dutch team, dressed in traditional orange national outfit has been working on tonight's High-Rise Koekhapping contest all day. In this contest, both the Dutch traditional koekhapping as the cutting edge architectural skills are combined in an architectural game for teams of two (one strong and one sensitive). Gen-ever drinks are provided just as the world famous Bitterballen and Frikadellen snacks. The Swish team brought a small mountain with chalet and is looking for a place to assemble the whole. "French mountains are of inferior quality, so we felt the responsibility to bring our own" one of the Swish participants informed the PARAPLU. Kafi-Lutz and Schoggibanane will be served.

Though some countries seem to have disappeared to get the required ingredients as fresh as possible from their home country and some preparations are extremely secret, the PARAPLU provides you with all the latest information. Some countries are still phylosophing about the right date, such as Greece, Turkey, Italy and Spain combining themselves in a Meditarenian Fiesta with Turkish Raki, and Greek "refreshments". Spain is still looking for caramba size sangria buckets. Italians have been reported missing from workshops as they need all pasta-stirring capacity. Turkish EASA participants apperently all were selected on their achievements in belly dancing.

MONDAY

The former Yugoslavian countries will temporarily re-unite in some event. As always, there is very much unknown by the former Yugoslavians. There will be Croatian viška pogača for eating purposes and Serbian pelinkovac to drink, as long as the Serbs don't drink it all on forehand. Belarus will be organizing a slideshow on Sovjet design and architecture, followed by the consumption of national food, Vodka & Jorsh ending in a Sovjet disco.

TUESDAY

A Scandinavian party will be held, Denmark still rethinking if they are a part of it. Denmark reports that there will be 5 rules, as that is what Denmark is famous for. Swedish snus will be served and the party will be cheered up with a 4 hour ABBA! concert. Finland tries to take over the Sauna workshop as they claim it their national symbol. Included in the party is a "Head Coverage

EASA WEATHER!

Tomorrow's weather will improve again, the sun will hit on us with unprecedented force. Better fill up a bath tub with sun-screen and stay under. Drinking advise: local authorities warn for intoxications from swallowed sunscreen.

DOMINIQUE DEHAIS IN DEPTH WORKSHOP REVIEW

Dominique has had a turbulent career, exposing his art all over Europe combined with teaching at the Lille School of Architecture. His work draws a close relation with architecture, but refuses to give in to functionality. The concept of his sculpture emerges from the spacing or from what Heidegger calls 'the releasing of spaces. This years EASA brought him a change, embracing functionality but with an inspired eagerness to give a 'twist' to our good old bathroom. Thanks to the cook's desperate need for a proper functioning washing accomodation, Dominique set out redefining our smallest room incorporating highly innovative materials, including a glasfiber wash-bowl and a translucent (not transparent!) door. The result will be a kind of plug-in bathroom, sized to fit a truck, so after EASA our cook can drive his new acquisition home. That is: if it will get finished, because unfortunately not enough participants subscribed... so if anyone would like to help him out, you'll find him behind the bar area.

Competition" (who has the coolest haircut, beard, hat, moustache or mask?) French male organizers and le chef are already in training.

OTHER DAYS

UK will not present itself, they actually prefer beer with foam. Ireland reported that it would rock but it would also mention the fact that she still weeps. Ukraine's cuties will make a small presentation with slides about their country. French organization informed the paraplu about the french day, in which they don't work but only take part in sex scandals, sleeping workshops and drinking experiments. As wednesday remains still unclaimed, this will be the day. From every country a gift should be given to the French team. On the spot PARAPLU reporters understood the Louvre will be build in baguettes & fromage. Germany will introduce the new Krautburger. Hungary's brings a Lengoteke game, pálinko and a traditional hungarian plate fashion competition. All together the PARAPLU reporters are happy to see the preparations in progress and hope other countries will present themselves. It will be a great experience again! And of course the PARAPLU will keep you informed.

Orlando Bloom is
new James Bond

However, the 'Pirates of the Caribbean' heartthrob will not be replacing Pierce Brosnan as 007 - instead he will star in a movie about the suave spy's younger days. A source revealed: "The story that Orlando will play Bond is true but we are doing a rather novel film about the young James Bond. The author, Ian Fleming, never really got into this period of his character's life, but he did mention in 'You Only Live Twice' that Bond attended Fettes College, having been expelled from Eton. Miramax believe Orlando will be perfect for the role.
